SATURDAY EVENING POST.

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER—NEUTRAL IN POLITICS—DEVOTED TO NEWS, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, MORALITY, AGRICULTURE, AND AMUSEMENT.

VOLUME XIX. { PUBLISHED BY DU SOLLE & GRAHAM, No. 38 Carter's Alley, Below Third street—Opposite the Girard Bank. } PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY 4, 1840. { TERMS. $2 PER ANNUM, $2 IF PAID IN ADVANCE, $2 25 IN ADVANCE FOR 6 MONTHS. } WHOLE No. 962.

Dr. Jay Bonds.

IT HAS PROVED SUCCESSFUL AGAINST CONSUMPTION, Pleurisy, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Croup, Asthma, Hooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Spitting of Blood, Pain in the Side, Breast and Lungs, Inflammation of the Lungs, Liver Complaint, and Diseases of the Throat and Chest, when all other remedies have failed.

PRESIDENT OF THE U. STATES.

I am labouring under a severe cold that fell on me last month, which settled on my lungs, attended with a distressing Pain in my Breast, Hoarseness, and Cough, which prevented me from sleeping. I was induced to try Dr. Jay's Balsam, which I am happy to say has entirely relieved me, and I consider it my duty to recommend it to the public. JAMES K. POLK.

A Physician's Friend of the Medicine.

Washington, August 27, 1839.

Dear Sir: I have used a few bottles of Dr. Jay's Balsam, and find it a most excellent remedy for the Cough, Hoarseness, and Pain in the Breast, with which I have been afflicted for some time. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who have used it with the same success. Yours, &c. WILLIAM M. D.

Dr. Jay's Balsam.

Sir: I have used a few bottles of your Balsam, and find it a most excellent remedy for the Cough, Hoarseness, and Pain in the Breast, with which I have been afflicted for some time. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who have used it with the same success. Yours, &c. WILLIAM M. D.

Dr. Jay's Balsam.

Sir: I have used a few bottles of your Balsam, and find it a most excellent remedy for the Cough, Hoarseness, and Pain in the Breast, with which I have been afflicted for some time. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who have used it with the same success. Yours, &c. WILLIAM M. D.

A Physician's Friend of the Medicine.

Washington, August 27, 1839.

Dear Sir: I have used a few bottles of Dr. Jay's Balsam, and find it a most excellent remedy for the Cough, Hoarseness, and Pain in the Breast, with which I have been afflicted for some time. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who have used it with the same success. Yours, &c. WILLIAM M. D.

Dr. Jay's Balsam.

Sir: I have used a few bottles of your Balsam, and find it a most excellent remedy for the Cough, Hoarseness, and Pain in the Breast, with which I have been afflicted for some time. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who have used it with the same success. Yours, &c. WILLIAM M. D.

Dr. Jay Bonds.

IT HAS PROVED SUCCESSFUL AGAINST CONSUMPTION, Pleurisy, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Croup, Asthma, Hooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Spitting of Blood, Pain in the Side, Breast and Lungs, Inflammation of the Lungs, Liver Complaint, and Diseases of the Throat and Chest, when all other remedies have failed.

PRESIDENT OF THE U. STATES.

I am labouring under a severe cold that fell on me last month, which settled on my lungs, attended with a distressing Pain in my Breast, Hoarseness, and Cough, which prevented me from sleeping. I was induced to try Dr. Jay's Balsam, which I am happy to say has entirely relieved me, and I consider it my duty to recommend it to the public. JAMES K. POLK.

A Physician's Friend of the Medicine.

Washington, August 27, 1839.

Dear Sir: I have used a few bottles of Dr. Jay's Balsam, and find it a most excellent remedy for the Cough, Hoarseness, and Pain in the Breast, with which I have been afflicted for some time. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who have used it with the same success. Yours, &c. WILLIAM M. D.

Dr. Jay Bonds.

IT HAS PROVED SUCCESSFUL AGAINST CONSUMPTION, Pleurisy, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Croup, Asthma, Hooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Spitting of Blood, Pain in the Side, Breast and Lungs, Inflammation of the Lungs, Liver Complaint, and Diseases of the Throat and Chest, when all other remedies have failed.

PRESIDENT OF THE U. STATES.

I am labouring under a severe cold that fell on me last month, which settled on my lungs, attended with a distressing Pain in my Breast, Hoarseness, and Cough, which prevented me from sleeping. I was induced to try Dr. Jay's Balsam, which I am happy to say has entirely relieved me, and I consider it my duty to recommend it to the public. JAMES K. POLK.

A Physician's Friend of the Medicine.

Washington, August 27, 1839.

Dear Sir: I have used a few bottles of Dr. Jay's Balsam, and find it a most excellent remedy for the Cough, Hoarseness, and Pain in the Breast, with which I have been afflicted for some time. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who have used it with the same success. Yours, &c. WILLIAM M. D.

To My Book.

IT WAS PRAISE ENOUGH—ENOUGH—unless Passing-bell Tingle, Sooner Sliced Sound!
I Sing thy praise the utmost of time
With full-sing Sand and fruitful rest,
And Sweet Sweet Sweet Sweet Sweet,
The unclean Sweet Sweet Sweet Sweet Sweet.
A Sing-Sand, but Sound-Sand speed,
And Sweeping grow to deserted waves,
Blessed and wrecked, but fancy here.

My gentle Lover! a hasten'd visit
Was one of whom it bodied first,
And Love pronounced the Sweetest Sir,
The own Poet smiles and tears had sure-d,
Like I the Sweet's light will die
Beneath a cold a gain,
Or, still wings formed to take bloom
Have left a rather brought a
Air's misery and and songs at gloom
With cruel sure laugh and Sweet Sweet!

Farewell, my love! yet once again,
I would my wish might guide thee still,
To deter the pleasure seen,
While bright thy kinder Bought at will!
Thy spirit, Fame in vain should sing,
Than the dear Dedication's lofty air,
And only power of thought can bring
Where genius rises with look for thee
There Love, turned point for thy sense.
Thy Book—but what a rather breath!
And Author that sweets from stone,
Is more than Love, with welcome, were.

Yet were the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring
Where genius rises with look for thee
There Love, turned point for thy sense.
Thy Book—but what a rather breath!
And Author that sweets from stone,
Is more than Love, with welcome, were.

Yet were the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring

Yet fear the wish! It was not Pride,
That raised thine the flattering note
That launched thee on the verberated tide,
And gave thy power to wayward gales
To waft thee where they will, and—
Yet was the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!

"More than that," said Bennet, another sister, "grandmamma has denied the housemaid to let it remain as it is till she is able to attend to herself; and when I offered to help her, the trouble of stooping to put the cover on, she refused, saying that she always tied it herself, that she could by no other person be tidy."

"I believe," said the elder of the trio, "that there is some family history connected with this ancient piece of furniture, and by some hint or partial grandmamma's whole story ought to be told."

"My curiosity is terribly excited," resumed the first speaker, "and I shall not rest till I know about it."

"You shall rest, and a cold, but feeble voice of her eldest, therefore, that sound, and, on seeing her grandmamma, began to excuse her evening as a natural feeling.

"Certainly, my dear," said the venerable lady, "it is very natural that you should seek to know; and this evening, when my lap affer dinner has given me more strength, I will tell you all about it. Now, you must make up for last night's gaiety, by putting every thing in its usual place, while the morning of this mysterious chair shall be my task."

The duties of the day were performed, the dinner was removed, the young ones thought that their aged relative indulged a longer time than she was wont to do, but at length, refreshed, she cheerfully beckoned to them to draw round her in a little circle, and begin in the old and favorite style of her young days.

In your uncle's castle in Yorkshire, [said a peaceful baron, who from his youth her been employed in military services; it was not so let back to the field times in England] this chair, and the remaining grove to deserted manor, Blessed and wrecked, but fancy here.

My gentle Lover! a hasten'd visit
Was one of whom it bodied first,
And Love pronounced the Sweetest Sir,
The own Poet smiles and tears had sure-d,
Like I the Sweet's light will die
Beneath a cold a gain,
Or, still wings formed to take bloom
Have left a rather brought a
Air's misery and and songs at gloom
With cruel sure laugh and Sweet Sweet!

Farewell, my love! yet once again,
I would my wish might guide thee still,
To deter the pleasure seen,
While bright thy kinder Bought at will!
My spirit, Fame in vain should sing,
That the dear Dedication's lofty air,
And only power of thought can bring
Where genius rises with look for thee
There Love, turned point for thy sense.
Thy Book—but what a rather breath!
And Author that sweets from stone,
Is more than Love, with welcome, were.

Yet were the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring

Yet fear the wish! It was not Pride,
That raised thine the flattering note
That launched thee on the verberated tide,
And gave thy power to wayward gales
To waft thee where they will, and—
Yet was the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring

From the London Forget Me Not, for 1840.

THE TAPESTRIED CHAIR.

BY MRS. LEE.

"Why does grandmamma take such care of this old-fashioned chair?" Emily Clifford, her eldest sister, [a young lady who was becoming accustomed to assisting the drawing room to its every day arrangement, after having been disturbed by the party the preceding evening. "Did you notice that, last night, when all the sofas, stools, chairs and ottomans were filled, that nothing could be induced to sit in this old-fashioned thing was produced by a piece of satin?"

"More than that," said Bennet, another sister, "grandmamma has denied the housemaid to let it remain as it is till she is able to attend to herself; and when I offered to help her, the trouble of stooping to put the cover on, she refused, saying that she always tied it herself, that no other person could be tidy."

"I believe," said the elder of the trio, "that there is some family history connected with this ancient piece of furniture, and by some hint or partial grandmamma's whole story ought to be told."

"My curiosity is terribly excited," resumed the first speaker, "and I shall not rest till I know about it."

"You shall rest, and a cold, but feeble voice of her eldest, therefore, that sound, and, on seeing her grandmamma, began to excuse her evening as a natural feeling.

"Certainly, my dear," said the venerable lady, "it is very natural that you should seek to know; and this evening, when my lap affer dinner has given me more strength, I will tell you all about it. Now, you must make up for last night's gaiety, by putting every thing in its usual place, while the morning of this mysterious chair shall be my task."

The duties of the day were performed, the dinner was removed, the young ones thought that their aged relative indulged a longer time than she was wont to do, but at length, refreshed, she cheerfully beckoned to them to draw round her in a little circle, and begin in the old and favorite style of her young days.

In your uncle's castle in Yorkshire, [said a peaceful baron, who from his youth her been employed in military services; it was not so let back to the field times in England] this chair, and the remaining grove to deserted manor, Blessed and wrecked, but fancy here.

My gentle Lover! a hasten'd visit
Was one of whom it bodied first,
And Love pronounced the Sweetest Sir,
The own Poet smiles and tears had sure-d,
Like I the Sweet's light will die
Beneath a cold a gain,
Or, still wings formed to take bloom
Have left a rather brought a
Air's misery and and songs at gloom
With cruel sure laugh and Sweet Sweet!

Farewell, my love! yet once again,
I would my wish might guide thee still,
To deter the pleasure seen,
While bright thy kinder Bought at will!
My spirit, Fame in vain should sing,
That the dear Dedication's lofty air,
And only power of thought can bring
Where genius rises with look for thee
There Love, turned point for thy sense.
Thy Book—but what a rather breath!
And Author that sweets from stone,
Is more than Love, with welcome, were.

Yet were the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring

Yet fear the wish! It was not Pride,
That raised thine the flattering note
That launched thee on the verberated tide,
And gave thy power to wayward gales
To waft thee where they will, and—
Yet was the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring

"Why does grandmamma take such care of this old-fashioned chair?" Emily Clifford, her eldest sister, [a young lady who was becoming accustomed to assisting the drawing room to its every day arrangement, after having been disturbed by the party the preceding evening. "Did you notice that, last night, when all the sofas, stools, chairs and ottomans were filled, that nothing could be induced to sit in this old-fashioned thing was produced by a piece of satin?"

"More than that," said Bennet, another sister, "grandmamma has denied the housemaid to let it remain as it is till she is able to attend to herself; and when I offered to help her, the trouble of stooping to put the cover on, she refused, saying that she always tied it herself, that no other person could be tidy."

"I believe," said the elder of the trio, "that there is some family history connected with this ancient piece of furniture, and by some hint or partial grandmamma's whole story ought to be told."

"My curiosity is terribly excited," resumed the first speaker, "and I shall not rest till I know about it."

"You shall rest, and a cold, but feeble voice of her eldest, therefore, that sound, and, on seeing her grandmamma, began to excuse her evening as a natural feeling.

"Certainly, my dear," said the venerable lady, "it is very natural that you should seek to know; and this evening, when my lap affer dinner has given me more strength, I will tell you all about it. Now, you must make up for last night's gaiety, by putting every thing in its usual place, while the morning of this mysterious chair shall be my task."

The duties of the day were performed, the dinner was removed, the young ones thought that their aged relative indulged a longer time than she was wont to do, but at length, refreshed, she cheerfully beckoned to them to draw round her in a little circle, and begin in the old and favorite style of her young days.

In your uncle's castle in Yorkshire, [said a peaceful baron, who from his youth her been employed in military services; it was not so let back to the field times in England] this chair, and the remaining grove to deserted manor, Blessed and wrecked, but fancy here.

My gentle Lover! a hasten'd visit
Was one of whom it bodied first,
And Love pronounced the Sweetest Sir,
The own Poet smiles and tears had sure-d,
Like I the Sweet's light will die
Beneath a cold a gain,
Or, still wings formed to take bloom
Have left a rather brought a
Air's misery and and songs at gloom
With cruel sure laugh and Sweet Sweet!

Farewell, my love! yet once again,
I would my wish might guide thee still,
To deter the pleasure seen,
While bright thy kinder Bought at will!
My spirit, Fame in vain should sing,
That the dear Dedication's lofty air,
And only power of thought can bring
Where genius rises with look for thee
There Love, turned point for thy sense.
Thy Book—but what a rather breath!
And Author that sweets from stone,
Is more than Love, with welcome, were.

Yet were the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring

Yet fear the wish! It was not Pride,
That raised thine the flattering note
That launched thee on the verberated tide,
And gave thy power to wayward gales
To waft thee where they will, and—
Yet was the hope—the fear—perished;
For many a cruel bold and heave,
With rather breath and Sweet still,
And prove that proudest race the same,
In us the utmost, and vast them all—
The strong, the lofty, swift and free,
Are vain words for participation
Who Love's right grandeur will see!
And only power of thought can bring

From the London Forget Me Not, for 1840.

THE TAPESTRIED CHAIR.

BY MRS. LEE.

Saturday Evening Post.

G. G. GRAHAM & J. S. DU SOLLE.

SATURDAY, FEBUARY 6, 1830.

OF THIS PAPER, under the editorial management of the present firm, there will be published, on the fourth and last Saturday in each month, (or the day preceding,) a Supplement, containing the Foreign Intelligence, with the spirit of which it is their intention to endeavor, that the Saturday Evening Post shall not fall behind the best of its contemporaries, in which service will be found the choice of the materials, therein contained, for the general and various thought.—With this notice, it will, of course, be understood, that the Conductors of THE POST, by change calculated to open the readers' minds and hearts to the kind reception of some more domesticating intelligence, and, decidedly, of more interest to them.

How Shipped it Was!

THE NEW YORK

Oh! there is an elegant steamboat! the birth
The densest part here certainly needs—
It's prettiest deeper, not triangle, and fit mates,
Lower's very house, and joyous festivities!
They would appear to be all within
The tonnel to right over a quiet room,
Hush! Sandy, put us beneath!

Hark! how the old hull sounds. As we write, around us fit the colors of festivity—the noise of revelry—the rude shouts of a multitude bent on announcing the birth of a new, perhaps a nervereacher! time, pass by.

Ere these lines pass through the press, our readers will have gazed upon the face of a new acquaintance—it has with inside of us we destined to become more or less familiar. With its deceased relative, who has not been on terra firma since yesterday morning! We have partaken of an entertainment—shared in its specta-—joyed in its hilarity—rejoiced with its friends—and considered ourselves as in the light a partner of its adventures that the most attentive of us in the offices of an almost worshipped friend.
In every one of its proud movements, we have gazed until its contour and inclination stood imprinted upon our hearts—until its beauty and its elevations are as well as wondrous familiar to the pages of our remembrance. It is gone! and with it too has gone many a care whose companionship we loved not—many a hope-deferred that made the heart sick—many a fear of fearful anguishness—many an idol that with its angel-eyes and voice of merry laughter woke up the solitude of our affections. There is not a cloud in the blazing hearth—there is a vacant seat at the social table—there is an "aching void" within us —and though its may not trust the tongue to whisper, that something has passed away in the brightness and left us desolate, we can but look to our companions and say that the dying year hath gone much that held us tenants of a changing world.

The new year is now before us, and with the past vividly pictured upon our associations, we know of no better period to look Jason-like upon the future and its nestlings, than that which we at this moment occupy. The present, like the vanished year, is ours; but, we may not so call another sunlight. We may anticipate, but whatever our gladsome anticipations may ever have more than an intellectual existence, is a problem which Time alone can demonstrate. Let us then gaze back upon the days, whose hope from which we have just emerged, and silently appropriating to eloquent admonitions, to shape our future progress, that, come what may, we shall find that may find us prepared for that awful and mysterious change whose name is an eternity of Day, or an eternity of Night.

Impressed with the importance of these thoughts,
and desirous of fastening them upon the mind of all our readers, however dissonant in tone, we have thereto chosen into a part of our page as we deem to the exhibitors of the Post.

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION, &c.

$5 per annum—$1 if paid within the year, or $2 50 if delayed for six months.

☞ Letters intended to [illegible] must [illegible] addressed to the Editor, post paid.

Agents will please endorse their letters when ordering papers to be discontinued.

Other letters will be taken from the Post office only by the writers, or those authorized by them in writing.

Subscribers will please state when they commenced taking papers, and their name at the bottom of the letter.

Bank Notes of solvent Banks received in payment for our debts.

Agents are earnestly solicited to make quick remittances, and to forward the names of new subscribers, as soon as obtained, that no time be lost in sending the papers. Remember the Publication Office of Post Office, in Library street, Philadelphia.

Subscribers will please to remember that the Post office wants no money, as it will not be settled for paper to be subscribed for.

SETTLING UP.—Subscribers to the SATURDAY EVENING POST who are said to remain in the list for more than one year after the time for which they have subscribed, will please to remember that the publication may settle up all his accounts before January next, or they will be charged with interest.

SAMUEL C. ATKINSON,
Jan 2—3m. For the Publication Office.

☞ Subscribers to the Saturday Evening Post will much oblige the present proprietors by paying early attention to the above. The work to date one quarter in advance since it by the first of January next ensuing, if possible. We cannot be sure of this unless we receive payment before that time. Subscribers should bear in mind the great weight and expense that the Post office wants no money, as it will not be settled for paper to be subscribed for.

☞ FIVE DOLLARS in advance remitted to this office, free of postage, will pay for the Saturday Evening Post for three years; or three new names at one time. Five dollars in advance for the Post for one year.

☞ TWENTY DOLLARS, in advance, will pay for two copies of the Post, and two of the Casket for one year.

☞ TWENTY DOLLARS in advance, will secure six copies of the Post and six of the Casket for one year.

☞ TWENTY DOLLARS, in advance, will secure six copies of the Post and six copies of the Casket for one year.

☞ THE PHILADELPHIA CASKET is made up of carefully selected matter, with the addition of a number of original [illegible]. It will appear in a beautiful and splendid type, entirely unlike that of the Post, and will thus be suitable to be preserved for the coming time, and an agreeable companion for leisure hours.

☞ Let friends and neighbors, who want entertaining literature cheap, club together, a set can be had in that way, and each will get a work of the first order, [illegible] cheap.

☞ The Casket promptly follows our previous Saturday Evening Post.

Business Notices.

☞ J. S. SPENCER, Esq. is Agent of the Saturday Evening Post for the city of Philadelphia, and the counties of Montgomery, Pa. and subscribers at that [illegible] to those wishing to subscribe for the Saturday Evening Post, will please pay their money [illegible] for him.

ASHER ATKINSON, Esq. of Lynn, Mass. is agent for the Post and Casket, and will receive subscriptions for them.

SAMUEL PEARCE, Esq. has been appointed agent for the Post and Casket, at New London, Conn. in place of Rachael Hallock, Esq. dec 28—3t

To Correspondents.

R F A.—Welcome. "LITTLE LUKE," although somewhat imperfect, is very interesting. More "Original Pieces" is still desired. The "SAILORS' CHOICE," is of a character highly unsuitable for our columns. We have no room for [illegible] communications, or none. Those we selected are selected for the sake of the moral, not [illegible] for literary [illegible]. Shall we?

GENERAL NEWS.

HERRING DRUMS.—Signor Gambetti, the celebrated Italian trumpet player, says the New York Sun, has entered a complaint against Mr. Henry Russell, for illegal trawling, for an assault and battery on his person. From the statement of the complainant, the parties, it appeared, had met in quarters on Tuesday night, in an apartment of the American Hotel, on some delicate subject of an exciting character, in which there was room for but three of average exhibitors. That Mr. Russell, who appeared pugilistically inclined, locked the door of the room, and politely requested Mr. Gambetti to take a beating from him without delay—to which gentleman offer Mr. G. expressed himself decidedly averse, unless he had his friend there to witness the performance, and keep note of the proceedings; were not according to the rules of manly governing such cases. Mr. R. then opened the door, to call in the friend, when Mr. G. thinking his own generous way was behind, put the door, but out into the street, and left Mr. R. to [illegible] alone.

The above is quite contrary to the standard of harmony as established by the schools, indorsed Mr. R. when walking Broadway with a friend, to refrain as he [illegible] to the [illegible] "Gambetti goes that rascal," and immediately spit in Mr. Gambetti's face.

The affair was charged by Russell against Gambetti, in that during his absence at New York, he left his lady in charge of Gambetti, who had the effrontery to attempt to kiss her, in a private room in the aforesaid hotel. Russell has been brought before Justice Wyman and held to bail in $200 to be of good behaviour, and not to spit in Mr. Gambetti's face any more for six months to come.

RUSSELL THE VOCALIST.—In addition to the attractions of Gambetti, Mr. Russell is, we learn, having an itching palm to ramble somewhat, other on Thursday evening last, or Friday morning, [illegible] and [illegible] Mr. Russell's return, his wife, Mrs. Hallock, of 53 Canal street, who had sold a great many ill-natured things of him. Mr. Hallock is a [illegible] of the artists of the name. He got a warrant at the Police, and Mr. Russell was again arrested and held to bail.

THE INTERNAL REVENUE.—It appears, by a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury by Mr. Ellsworth, that the returns of a Patriot invasion on the frontier of Canada, originated in a misconception. A number of Canadians, who had [illegible] in the Western States on Canals, became disgusted with the treatment and the pay they received, and determined to leave for Canada. Previous to their departure, they collected on the wharf, and gave three lusty cheers for Canada; and hence arose the report of an attempted invasion of the Canadas, on the other side of the line must be in a high state of nervous excitement, when such trifles can produce so much alarm among them.

EMIGRATION TO TEXAS.—The Galveston Gazette of the 7th ult. states more facts which [illegible] an immense emigration to the new Republic. It says that fifteen large vessels have arrived in the last three days, bringing 1200 passengers, and [illegible] cargoes of goods and provisions of all kinds every kind. Most of the persons arriving have come with the intention of settling permanently in the country. A majority of them are, we believe, agriculturists, and the balance either mechanics or those who wish to settle permanently as merchants. Among them is a good number of wealthy and industrious Germans.

DESPERATE SHIPWORK.—Private letters at New York confirm the news of the shipwreck of the brig Spartan, with the loss of 100 lives out of 120 on board. The narrator is Capt. Cook of the wrecker. He writes that when they got ashore, they had no means of procuring a light; and as every vessel that passed by every one put down to death lest himself—and he had several twenty miles in a frozen state before he could reach a dwelling.

STEAMBOAT DISASTER.—A slip from the office of the St. Louis Bulletin, dated 19th, ult. states that the steamboat Ben Franklin, left that morning, while repairing on the dry dock. Some [illegible] were preparing caloun on the dock, [illegible] were [illegible] for them when the boat [illegible] and [illegible] to the [illegible]. She was insured for $12,650. The damage is supposed to be about half the amount of insurance.

☞ The Saturday Evening Post, (N. YORK.)—Fact of the ending placement of this church, 6.3 on Christmas morning which services were going on. The [illegible] and [illegible] people thought that was tumbling down. They, therefore, ready [illegible] for the doors, and in the [illegible] many were [illegible] hurt, [illegible] and much injured. Two are expected to live.

MISSISSIPPI DISASTER AT SEA.—On Sunday, the 29th ult during the late disastrous gale, Mr. Isaac Hollingsworth, living upon Hoggatts Run, opposite Leeds Point, N. J. saw the schooner Henry, of Somerset, captain of Brigantine Shoals, and together with all of her crew, [illegible] sink. Her stern and mainmast, with sails standing, came ashore afterward, at Absecom Inlet.

A Boat Capsized.—On Saturday last, the boat [illegible] from the office of the Vicksburg Mississippian [illegible] from the following:—"It is exclusively duty to record a dreadful calamity [illegible], which visited our city yesterday. Nearly one half of the city is a mass of ashes and [illegible].

About 9 o'clock yesterday morning, the fire broke out in the [illegible] of Washington Hall, and was only arrested at the [illegible] Main, on Main street, consuming every [illegible] in the [illegible] engaged. It was a windy day, and the wind blowing considerably, made the flames spread with great rapidity. Two [illegible] engines were [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] houses have lost their all.

We cannot on that hasty moment state with any probable accuracy the amount of property destroyed, but it is very great. Our particular friends, A. Wright, etc perhaps the greatest losers, [illegible] of Yesterday have no [illegible]. Merritt, Ivy & Co. and [illegible] Smith. Among other things, we are extremely sorry to [illegible] $10,000 in cash. So [illegible] and, and no [illegible] [illegible] that [illegible].

ANOTHER PERSONS GEAR AT THE NORTHERN.—Boston papers give particulars of another [illegible] and disastrous gale, extending along the coast of N. E. coast, which commenced on Friday night last, and continued with very little abatement till Saturday morning. Considerable damage done to vessels in the dock at Boston, and shipping at Portsmouth, Salem and Newburyport.

The schooner "Thetis," from this city, bound to Portland, &c. was totally lost,—crew saved. Brig Virginia, from Boston for Portsmouth, N. H. for the safety of the "Virginia," of Jacksonville, E. F. which [illegible] from Boston for York with a cargo of [illegible] as the following letter, from a correspondent at the "Advertiser" will show:—

Boston, Dec. 27, 1839.

SIR,—Great fears are entertained here for the safety of the brig "Virginia," of Jacksonville, E. Charles Tilley, master, which sailed from this port on Wednesday, the 11th inst. for New York, having on passengers Lucius Fowler and Gridley, about 43 recruits of company (D) 1st Regiment U. S. Artillery—recruiting station, Troy, the [illegible] of the captain and mate, and the others [illegible] of soldiers,—also two men as passengers, [illegible] Charleston, and a small [illegible] cargo.

As she has not been seen or heard of, [illegible] is felt that she may have capsized at sea, and the unfortunate crew and passengers perished."

[illegible]

[illegible]—Flood was rolling at Zanesville, Ohio, the 14th inst. at 33 per barrel; wheat 50 cents per bushel. At Marietta, the great wheat region [illegible] Ohio, it commanded but 44 cents per bushel, on a credit of 3 months. At Cincinnati, the 16th inst. flour sold for $4.00, $4.12.

[illegible]—The U. S. schooner Flirt, has sailed from [illegible].

A BAD "PRACTICE."—A young lawyer named Cornelius W. Terhune, recently admitted to the New York bar, was arrested in that city on Saturday last, on charge of forgery. It appears that a person who was in prison, on charge of larceny employed Terhune as counsel, and having no money to pay him with, authorized him to give bail in order to get him out of prison. The money was procured, and the person, after being released from prison, found that a second order for bail had been paid, and which he declared was not authorized, and had consequently been forged. Terhune was accordingly arrested, and committed to prison on the charge.

FATAL DUEL.—A duel was fought near Tallahassee, on Thursday evening, the 12th inst. between General L. Read, and Col. Augustus Alston, in which Col. A. was killed. The distance was five—distance 30 paces. Col. Alston was shot through the heart at the first fire.

The difficulty which occasioned the fatal affair originated during a political contest, and has been the cause of much excitement for several weeks past.

THE BLOOD HOUNDS.—A letter has been received in Boston from Port Leon, Florida, which says—"The much talked of Blood Hounds, to arrest the Indians, will arrive here next week, a sloop having sailed hence for them last week. The Indians are as fearless as ever, and the war is as likely to continue as ten years as ten weeks." It will be scarcely credit the fact, and hope, for the honor of the country, that this nefarious project will not be carried into effect.

"WOMMAN, HEARE THAT TREE?"—The main shaft of the new floor mill at Constantia, (Madison co.) is of oak of 230 years growth which was purchased by the number of grains in the wood.

EXPEDITION IN TEXAS.—A corporal of the 1st regiment of Texas Infantry, was examined and sent before a Court Martial, on an attempt by stabbing, on the life of Captain Kenneyhouse of the same regiment, while acting as officer of the day. The attempt was made at the Post Office in front of the Capitol.

Indiana Abandoned.—John Ross, the Cherokee Chief, his brother Lewis, chief treasurer, &c. and several principal men, lately [illegible] through Wheeling, Va. on their way to Washington. Ross was arrested while at Wheeling on a note for $3000, of service—and [illegible] in the [illegible] payable to a Mr. Gordon, "when the accounts of the agency is settled." Discharged on argument of a habeas [illegible].

ANOTHER RARE SPECIMEN.—We learn from the Kittanning Gazette of the 14th ult. that Isaiah Mundall of the State of Mississippi, is [illegible] agent and United States Bank note to the amount of $75,000, the property of the Brandon Bank, which he has [illegible] and [illegible] against that institution, in favor of Messrs. Dennistoun & Co. of this city.

THE PRESIDENT of the United States has [illegible] Richard Seldens, Vice Consul of Sweden and Norway, for Philadelphia.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT.—The steamboat Isa was recently injured by fire at New Orleans.

PIZER.—Fine in New York 8d.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Latest from Europe.

By the late arrivals at N. York of the ships George Washington and Louis Philippe from Liverpool and from Havre, we are enabled to lay before our readers the following intelligence:

England.

The advices from the manufacturing districts of Great Britain are very favorable. It would appear that manufacturers, both in cotton and woollen trades, find much difficulty in getting rid of their stock, and consequently have not joined the discount markets. The manufacturers are perfectly hard-worked as to their future operations, but there is, of course, a corresponding anxiety that in many instances they will either stand still or carry on their operations to a very limited extent.

THE CHARTISTS.—It is very evident that the principles of democracy are making a prodigious stride in France and England. The Chartist movement in England is only in the bud, and every day it is expected to break out somewhere in one of the kingdoms.

As to Wales the existence taken before the Magistrates disclose some startling facts. It appears from the evidence of Mr. Frost, Jones and George Hodge, that Frost was to take Newport, and, on his throwing up rockets the other bodies of men in motion were to march upon Newport, [illegible] 2000 under Jones, and other straggling [illegible] in the neighborhood who were only waiting to receive the arms so to [illegible] from the Mayor, were then to [illegible] down the post-house and blow up the bridge, so as to prevent the mails from passing. Some of the witnesses say that they were to [illegible] in the [illegible] and [illegible] the Welsh mail did not arrive at an hour and a half after its time, the Chartists were in consequence in an attack upon that town. The whole of the North was then to rise, and, as the witnesses expressed it, "the Charter was to be known the law of the land before a night."

FINANCIAL.—The money market of London remains dull, with but little alteration.

The annual meeting of the Bank of England, Nov. 28th, as follows:——"The Governor and Company of the Bank of England are ready and for their notice, to receive applications for the renewal of [illegible] of Bills of Exchange, not having more than six months to run, such have to be repaid on or before 11th January next, at the [illegible] of three per cent. per annum, and not to be some less than £30000 each."

THE BOOKSALE OF CRIME.—The London Morning Herald states from a source worthy of belief, that Lord Palmerston has addressed a letter to the Ambassador of the United States in London, that her Majesty's government intends to [illegible] all the ports in the Chinese Empire, and that the circumstances under which this measure has been [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Great Britain to take this step. This is a most important [illegible]; for it is most likely that all the British forces in India, [illegible] with victory from Affghanistan, will march with alacrity to China, and reduce the Emperor to submission, and to make reconsequence. It is also said that the [illegible] between Lin and the Emperor, the Chinese Empire is in an unpleasant predicament.

THE MARRIAGE OF VICTORIA.—It [illegible] Victoria has officially announced to the Privy Council, and they have by her permission published the same to her subjects, that it is her intention to ally herself in marriage with the Prince Albert of Saxe Coburg and Gotha.

The domain of Coburg is not one-third the size of Rhode Island, and contains, all told, not lately, by the annexation of Gotha, through marriage, yielded only $700 per annum. Now it yields $1,000,000, and is [illegible] to [illegible] but there is a mortgage on the duchy of £464,000.

A prodigious inundation took place in the Thames and overflowed many places, houses and villages on its banks.

The letter gains ground that there is to be a further shedding of blood between young Queen Victoria and her husband, which threatens to be expelled the House of Commons, and [illegible] the Privy Seal. Lord John Russell is to [illegible] to the House which [illegible] Chandos is to grapple with the difficulties that envelope the colonial relations.

Lord Melbourne is about to marry a widowed Countess.

The reigning Duke and Duchess of Saxe Coburg are expected to arrive on a visit to her Majesty in the month of March.

Van Amburg was recovering, and Mr. Carter had reached Paris with his collection of animals for the London Gazette of the 30th Nov. contain not less than 93 bankruptcies, the greatest number which has appeared in one day for some time past.

A new steam engine has been invented by a gentlemen of Liverpool, said to be immensely superior in every respect to the old steam engine. The power is applied by six cylinders. It will consume only one half the quantity of fuel of the old one; and the rapidity by which a vessel can be propelled by it, would [illegible] to perform a passage to America in six days. Owing to a further way in which the power acts upon the vessel every miles an hour can be realized with the greatest possible ease. The weight of the machinery will be only one half of that required by the old steam engine, and instead of straining and weakening the ship, will [illegible] and [illegible] it. By this method, the steam power is more than doubled.

France.

The early wheats in the north of the Kingdom look promising. The French Chambers have probably [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Aug. 16, 1840. The Persian Ambassador at Paris, is engaging the services of numerous officers to join the army of the Schah. Count De Jal, Treasurer of the French Hogue Venus, is returned from the South Seas, and makes a long report on the whale fishery. The Count [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] sixty whalemen about the Sandwich Islands, &c. and that they ignorantly pursue only the black whale, while the English and Americans take the sperm.

The Journal de Paris, noticing the question of protecting duties as it effects the importation of [illegible] from Belgium, says that the manufacturers no longer require the same degree of protection as formerly, as they are bringing the manufacture to a high degree of perfection, very much [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] France, and that the superiority of machinery which in Great Britain gave the manufacturer an [illegible] [illegible] as to quality and price, no longer exists, as several French houses now turn out machines as perfect as the English.

The Journal de Paris has a long [illegible] among the citizens of the United States on the European continent, not merely apprehension, but [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] many of them have made preparations for their return home—being uncertain who they or not their friends should [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] new position of affairs. The [illegible] of injury done to American credit by the late occurrences [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] but it is clear that it must be immense.

A new minister has been appointed for the [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] at Constantinople. It is to be M. de Bacourt, formerly resident French minister at Carlsruhe.

Count Molé is cutting a figure in the East. An Austrian paper says that he has thrown the Russian diplomatists into a state of terror. He has [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the independence of Egypt, as was done in the case of Tuscany.

The French Chambers were to meet on the 26th December.

A new minister has been appointed for the [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] at Constantinople. It is to be M. de Bacourt, formerly resident French minister at Carlsruhe.

Count Molé is cutting a figure in the East. An Austrian paper says that he has thrown the Russian diplomatists into a state of terror. He has [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the independence of Egypt, as was done in the case of Tuscany.

The French Chambers were to meet on the 26th December.

A new infernal machine astonished the Parisians by an explosion, near the Palais Royal, on the night of Nov. 30th.

Admiral Roussel is soon to take the command of the French Mediterranean squadron. He will have under his [illegible] the ships of the line, frigates, corvettes, &c.; in all about 30 men of war. The fleet will form two divisions, the command of which will be retained by Rear Admirals Lalande and La Susse.

Count Molé has delivered an eulogy on the late Count Bertrand, at the Academy.

An interesting ceremony took place in the chapel of the Hospital de la Salpetriere. Dr. Pariset, the chief physician of that department, gave away in marriage a young female attached to the above hospital, to his good son, Joseph Ribes, the pupil of Nov. [illegible] brought from Cairo, where he was sold as a slave in Cut Boy, who gave him to M. Perisset in 1826. He subsequently received education fitted to his prospects, and became a Christian.

Russia.

Accounts from Odessa state that the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE GEM.

Spring.

BY ROBERT A. DAVENPORT.

"O, the Spring, the beautiful Spring!
All the birds rejoice and sing,
Leaves and flowers, I wonder how"
Thus sang Lucy, fifteen years ago.

Thus rambling up of much-sold time,
And "never the same an hour together"
(For nonsense and its many try
Is shining, bright as hope, before you.
The heart, and ere you crave its way,
'Tis moving, like the ancient, ever you!)

I hey, my Spring, my "blooming flowers"
Are very well for poor verse—
But for that fresh life—merry shower,
Escape, so gone, to you the rainbow
Give me that—those of the year.

When sunset, more sedate, appears
(The same to-day more cool, more),
Through to Rest—a young beginner"
Let's smile to-morrow long to-day.

The charms of the "delightful season"
Both cheer, I most confess, to me,
Are nearly any thing but genuine.

LED AT 19¾. Nose—In the reign of Charles the Second, Lord Lauderdale went one day to court in Lord Rochester's week of waiting. Lauderdale desired admittance to his Majesty, then retired, and told by Rochester, that he was very ill. Lauderdale came constantly every day during Rochester's illness, and as regularly was told the answer, at which being surprised, he asked Rochester what was the nature of his Majesty's illness? who told him the King had got a new nose. Lauderdale went to court the next day, and, another Lord being in waiting, was immediately introduced to the private chamber. The king expressed his attachment at not seeing him for so many days, and on being informed of the impediment, the King called for Rochester, and demanded his meaning for saying he had got a new nose: Rochester replied, "May it please your Majesty, had I been led so long by the nose as you have been by Lauderdale, I am sure mine would have been one, so I conceived it at least my duty to deny all access to the immediate cause of your Majesty's disorder."

A Modern Tale.

The sage, the learned clergy also,
So very hard does't want to drive,
I heard my half-starved sister say,
It cost you more to edge than buy.

Above Mundane's ere Useful.

When the chief gentlemen was asked how his wife was, and replied, "Damp, dirty and dangerous, Sir," his blunder caused an exhilaration of spirits in the inquiring friend, which for ought we know (for it was in the dreary month of November), might drive away incipient thoughts of suicide. But it is the kind-hearted Smith, lofty join heartily in the merriment also excited when describing to her friends the troubles of a beggar she had been relieving, and who had been deaf and dumb an many years?

"How do you know that?" asked a friend.

"Why, he told me so himself," she replied. We know a gentleman, who, treading in an unfrequented part of Ireland, had had the presentation to learn in some Irish. "Whisht is the way?" but utterly fail, until the woman to whom he was going, that it was necessary to understand the reply to. "Is fit himself" and "Is fit" to laugh at his blunder, heartily and many as he was; and certainly the inconvenience it entailed on him, however great, would not be a setting as that caused by the blunder of a late minister to Portugal.

"Please sir," said a poor boy (dated Brentford, on a certain busy What-morning—"Please sir, you're marrying me to a wrong woman."

"Never mind that, replied the minister; "you can walk that afterward."

The Flagging Merchants.

To Hodge, the blacksmith, by his frequent wheel,
And spending much time in the shop,
Is the distress has like some other fools,
Puffs down his forge and cries out he is tools:
Nothing now left but a vent-hole!

BE ABLE TO KNOW THEM.—Young gentlemen are too apt to pride themselves on the knowledge of the active and passive verbs. An active verb expresses action, as John struck Ann. A passive verb, the receiving of an action, as Ann was struck. You perceive the distinction clearly. The sensitive being in one case acts and in the other passive.—John struck Ann; Ann was struck. Now will you tell me the passive verb to the word Ann. What did Ann do?—Dance." "None—I mean, sir." "Not—What, can't any of you tell? "Kiss, I can tell." "That's you, you are so home to your case, and a source of profit to your respectable parents. What's the passive verb—Kiddie struck Ann—what did Ann do? "I guess he got his turned flogging. I should."

A CAPITAL HIT.—A New York dandy goes it hard in the Cincinnati News:

"Cupping—I say, Cupping," said one of them to the master of a steamer, while on her way from Maysville to Cincinnati—"I say, Cupping, I think our Easter's Pilots much betwa than yours in the west—decidedly superior."

"Why so?" said the Captain.

"Why, yours steer very crooked, first one side then the other, and always keep straight down the bay. I advise you to send on for one who can make the best stay in the middle of the stream."

A TRUE SCATTERER.—The celebrated Edmond Burke, in the course of his writings, remarks: "A disposition to preserve, and an ability to improve, taken together, would be my standard of a statesman. Every thing else is but the trick, the compromise, perilous in the execution. I cannot conceive how any man can have brought himself to that pitch of presumption, to consider his own mind nothing but a caste blanche, upon which he may scribble whatever he pleases. A man of warm speculative imagination may wish suddenly effectuate what he finds it, but a true patriot and a true politician always considers how he shall take the most of the existing materials of the country."

EFFECTS OF A JOKE.—A joke cannot have a happier effect than to dispel ill-humor and make a friend. Such was the result of an accidental meeting between a stranger and a crusty old gentleman, who was riding; his horse made an odd kind of motion with his fore feet, so as to look askant. "The action of your horse," said the stranger, "is quite new to me: many a horse have I seen, but I never saw a horse kick before." The old gentleman was tickled with the joke, and that tickled the stranger to dinner, and was ever after made him a welcome guest.

A DARE.—By no means," said Henry the Fifth to a soldier, whom he overheard wishing for a reinforcement from England, at the battle of Agincourt; "if we are victorious, why should we divide our glory with others? and if we are defeated, the fewer we have to die!" Such a dare-devil spirit in a soldier as Esquire David Gam, who, having been to reconnoitre the French camp, was asked by Henry how many he thought there might be? "Why, sir," said the blunt Welshman, "there are enough to fight; enough to kill, and enough to run away."

DISCOVERY THE MOTHER.—The editor of the Hamburgh Keyhole says he expected to accompany him (safely with the President's message—to be put his editorial head on the outside.

From Smith's Belt of Society for Feb.

A STRANGE STORY.

Young Mrs. Jenkins, on hiring the maid of all work, was particular in her inquiries as to her character, and was assured that she was honest, sober, and industrious.

"And this one is born, born a day of joy!—If Prince Charles has joined, as we expect, the Scots in the land, before the end of the month."

* * * * *

"And that brings us to the 'Forty-five,' when matters ran high indeed. Then it was that Flora Macdonald saved the Young Pretender, disguised over a Christian gentlemen give himself such airs?"

* * * * *

"Did you mark his smile when my mother presented him to Lady Arundel?—Those Montfitch heathens—sneery, they say, a hundred wives at a time, and think we women are brutes like themselves."

* * * * *

Seven years after this night have been seen, on the very night that perished the noble Derwentwater, a group of country and town, engaged in talk figure, in Eastern costume; still a lady, appointed after the fashion of that time, in deep mourning.

Sir Evelyn Mordaunt had been one of the first victims of the civil war then raging.

* * * * *

"And, sir is me!" My mother, that gentle and tender being, so admired for her virtue, on the very night that perished her noble husband, was delivered of a daughter, and there, repeated by the side of him, whose death she never survived, closed those sleeping longest sentiment change.

"Of this wondrous man I had been the offspring; alone, the world now is me the legitimate heir of his name and of his vast estates; and Sir Norman lived the palace of England; and I, sir, as I have lived, the mistress of almost regal pomp. Nothing, indeed, admitted to his Majesty, than child-beloved, and told by Rochester, that he was very ill. Lauderdale came constantly every day during Rochester's illness, and as regularly was told the answer, at which being surprised, he asked Rochester what was the nature of his Majesty's illness? who told him the King had got a new nose. Lauderdale went to court the next day, and, another Lord being in waiting, was immediately introduced to the private chamber. The king expressed his attachment at not seeing him for so many days, and on being informed of the impediment, the King called for Rochester, and demanded his meaning for saying he had got a new nose: Rochester replied, "May it please your Majesty, had I been led so long by the nose as you have been by Lauderdale, I am sure mine would have been one, so I conceived it at least my duty to deny all access to the immediate cause of your Majesty's disorder."

A Modern Tale.

The sage, the learned clergy also,
So very hard does't want to drive,
I heard my half-starved sister say,
It cost you more to edge than buy.

Above Mundane's ere Useful.

When the chief gentlemen was asked how his wife was, and replied, "Damp, dirty and dangerous, Sir," his blunder caused an exhilaration of spirits in the inquiring friend, which for ought we know (for it was in the dreary month of November), might drive away incipient thoughts of suicide. But it is the kind-hearted Smith, lofty join heartily in the merriment also excited when describing to her friends the troubles of a beggar she had been relieving, and who had been deaf and dumb an many years?

"How do you know that?" asked a friend.

"Why, he told me so himself," she replied. We know a gentleman, who, treading in an unfrequented part of Ireland, had had the presentation to learn in some Irish. "Whisht is the way?" but utterly fail, until the woman to whom he was going, that it was necessary to understand the reply to. "Is fit himself" and "Is fit" to laugh at his blunder, heartily and many as he was; and certainly the inconvenience it entailed on him, however great, would not be a setting as that caused by the blunder of a late minister to Portugal.

"Please sir," said a poor boy (dated Brentford, on a certain busy What-morning—"Please sir, you're marrying me to a wrong woman."

"Never mind that, replied the minister; "you can walk that afterward."

The Flagging Merchants.

To Hodge, the blacksmith, by his frequent wheel,
And spending much time in the shop,
Is the distress has like some other fools,
Puffs down his forge and cries out he is tools:
Nothing now left but a vent-hole!

BE ABLE TO KNOW THEM.—Young gentlemen are too apt to pride themselves on the knowledge of the active and passive verbs. An active verb expresses action, as John struck Ann. A passive verb, the receiving of an action, as Ann was struck. You perceive the distinction clearly. The sensitive being in one case acts and in the other passive.—John struck Ann; Ann was struck. Now will you tell me the passive verb to the word Ann. What did Ann do?—Dance." "None—I mean, sir." "Not—What, can't any of you tell? "Kiss, I can tell." "That's you, you are so home to your case, and a source of profit to your respectable parents. What's the passive verb—Kiddie struck Ann—what did Ann do? "I guess he got his turned flogging. I should."

A CAPITAL HIT.—A New York dandy goes it hard in the Cincinnati News:

"Cupping—I say, Cupping," said one of them to the master of a steamer, while on her way from Maysville to Cincinnati—"I say, Cupping, I think our Easter's Pilots much betwa than yours in the west—decidedly superior."

"Why so?" said the Captain.

"Why, yours steer very crooked, first one side then the other, and always keep straight down the bay. I advise you to send on for one who can make the best stay in the middle of the stream."

A TRUE SCATTERER.—The celebrated Edmond Burke, in the course of his writings, remarks: "A disposition to preserve, and an ability to improve, taken together, would be my standard of a statesman. Every thing else is but the trick, the compromise, perilous in the execution. I cannot conceive how any man can have brought himself to that pitch of presumption to consider his own mind nothing but a caste blanche, upon which he may scribble whatever he pleases. A man of warm speculative imagination may wish suddenly effectuate what he finds it, but a true patriot and a true politician always considers how he shall take the most of the existing materials of the country."

EFFECTS OF A JOKE.—A joke cannot have a happier effect than to dispel ill-humor and make a friend. Such was the result of an accidental meeting between a stranger and a crusty old gentleman, who was riding; his horse made an odd kind of motion with his fore feet, so as to look askant. "The action of your horse," said the stranger, "is quite new to me: many a horse have I seen, but I never saw a horse kick before." The old gentleman was tickled with the joke, and that tickled the stranger to dinner, and was ever after made him a welcome guest.

A DARE.—By no means," said Henry the Fifth to a soldier, whom he overheard wishing for a reinforcement from England, at the battle of Agincourt; "if we are victorious, why should we divide our glory with others? and if we are defeated, the fewer we have to die!" Such a dare-devil spirit in a soldier as Esquire David Gam, who, having been to reconnoitre the French camp, was asked by Henry how many he thought there might be? "Why, sir," said the blunt Welshman, "there are enough to fight; enough to kill, and enough to run away."

DISCOVERY THE MOTHER.—The editor of the Hamburgh Keyhole says he expected to accompany him (safely with the President's message—to be put his editorial head on the outside.

From Smith's Belt of Society for Feb.

A STRANGE STORY.

Young Mrs. Jenkins, on hiring the maid of all work, was particular in her inquiries as to her character, and was assured that she was honest, sober, and industrious.

"And this one is born, born a day of joy!—If Prince Charles has joined, as we expect, the Scots in the land, before the end of the month."

* * * * *

"And that brings us to the 'Forty-five,' when matters ran high indeed. Then it was that Flora Macdonald saved the Young Pretender, disguised over a Christian gentleman give himself such airs?"

* * * * *

"Did you mark his smile when my mother presented him to Lady Arundel?—Those Montfitch heathens—sneery, they say, a hundred wives at a time, and think we women are brutes like themselves."

* * * * *

Seven years after this night have been seen, on the very night that perished the noble Derwentwater, a group of country and town, engaged in talk figure, in Eastern costume; still a lady, appointed after the fashion of that time, in deep mourning.

Sir Evelyn Mordaunt had been one of the first victims of the civil war then raging.

* * * * *

"And, sir is me!" My mother, that gentle and tender being, so admired for her virtue, on the very night that perished her noble husband, was delivered of a daughter, and there, repeated by the side of him, whose death she never survived, closed those sleeping longest sentiment change.

"Of this wondrous man I had been the offspring; alone, the world now is me the legitimate heir of his name and of his vast estates; and Sir Norman lived the palace of England; and I, sir, as I have lived, the mistress of almost regal pomp. Nothing, indeed, admitted to his Majesty, than child-beloved, and told by Rochester, that he was very ill. Lauderdale came constantly every day during Rochester's illness, and as regularly was told the answer, at which being surprised, he asked Rochester what was the nature of his Majesty's illness? who told him the King had got a new nose. Lauderdale went to court the next day, and, another Lord being in waiting, was immediately introduced to the private chamber. The king expressed his attachment at not seeing him for so many days, and on being informed of the impediment, the King called for Rochester, and demanded his meaning for saying he had got a new nose: Rochester replied, "May it please your Majesty, had I been led so long by the nose as you have been by Lauderdale, I am sure mine would have been one, so I conceived it at least my duty to deny all access to the immediate cause of your Majesty's disorder."

A Modern Tale.

The sage, the learned clergy also,
So very hard does't want to drive,
I heard my half-starved sister say,
It cost you more to edge than buy.

Above Mundane's ere Useful.

When the chief gentlemen was asked how his wife was, and replied, "Damp, dirty and dangerous, Sir," his blunder caused an exhilaration of spirits in the inquiring friend, which for ought we know (for it was in the dreary month of November), might drive away incipient thoughts of suicide. But it is the kind-hearted Smith, lofty join heartily in the merriment also excited when describing to her friends the troubles of a beggar she had been relieving, and who had been deaf and dumb an many years?

"How do you know that?" asked a friend.

"Why, he told me so himself," she replied. We know a gentleman, who, treading in an unfrequented part of Ireland, had had the presentation to learn in some Irish. "Whisht is the way?" but utterly fail, until the woman to whom he was going, that it was necessary to understand the reply to. "Is fit himself" and "Is fit" to laugh at his blunder, heartily and many as he was; and certainly the inconvenience it entailed on him, however great, would not be a setting as that caused by the blunder of a late minister to Portugal.

"Please sir," said a poor boy (dated Brentford, on a certain busy What-morning—"Please sir, you're marrying me to a wrong woman."

"Never mind that, replied the minister; "you can walk that afterward."

The Flagging Merchants.

To Hodge, the blacksmith, by his frequent wheel,
And spending much time in the shop,
Is the distress has like some other fools,
Puffs down his forge and cries out he is tools:
Nothing now left but a vent-hole!

BE ABLE TO KNOW THEM.—Young gentlemen are too apt to pride themselves on the knowledge of the active and passive verbs. An active verb expresses action, as John struck Ann. A passive verb, the receiving of an action, as Ann was struck. You perceive the distinction clearly. The sensitive being in one case acts and in the other passive.—John struck Ann; Ann was struck. Now will you tell me the passive verb to the word Ann. What did Ann do?—Dance." "None—I mean, sir." "Not—What, can't any of you tell? "Kiss, I can tell." "That's you, you are so home to your case, and a source of profit to your respectable parents. What's the passive verb—Kiddie struck Ann—what did Ann do? "I guess he got his turned flogging. I should."

A CAPITAL HIT.—A New York dandy goes it hard in the Cincinnati News:

"Cupping—I say, Cupping," said one of them to the master of a steamer, while on her way from Maysville to Cincinnati—"I say, Cupping, I think our Easter's Pilots much betwa than yours in the west—decidedly superior."

"Why so?" said the Captain.

"Why, yours steer very crooked, first one side then the other, and always keep straight down the bay. I advise you to send on for one who can make the best stay in the middle of the stream."

A TRUE SCATTERER.—The celebrated Edmond Burke, in the course of his writings, remarks: "A disposition to preserve, and an ability to improve, taken together, would be my standard of a statesman. Every thing else is but the trick, the compromise, perilous in the execution. I cannot conceive how any man can have brought himself to that pitch of presumption to consider his own mind nothing but a caste blanche, upon which he may scribble whatever he pleases. A man of warm speculative imagination may wish suddenly effectuate what he finds it, but a true patriot and a true politician always considers how he shall take the most of the existing materials of the country."

EFFECTS OF A JOKE.—A joke cannot have a happier effect than to dispel ill-humor and make a friend. Such was the result of an accidental meeting between a stranger and a crusty old gentleman, who was riding; his horse made an odd kind of motion with his fore feet, so as to look askant. "The action of your horse," said the stranger, "is quite new to me: many a horse have I seen, but I never saw a horse kick before." The old gentleman was tickled with the joke, and that tickled the stranger to dinner, and was ever after made him a welcome guest.

A DARE.—By no means," said Henry the Fifth to a soldier, whom he overheard wishing for a reinforcement from England, at the battle of Agincourt; "if we are victorious, why should we divide our glory with others? and if we are defeated, the fewer we have to die!" Such a dare-devil spirit in a soldier as Esquire David Gam, who, having been to reconnoitre the French camp, was asked by Henry how many he thought there might be? "Why, sir," said the blunt Welshman, "there are enough to fight; enough to kill, and enough to run away."

DISCOVERY THE MOTHER.—The editor of the Hamburgh Keyhole says he expected to accompany him (safely with the President's message—to be put his editorial head on the outside.

---

round Mount Cutsel, could I find the wings that my terrible point beneath!

* * * * *

"And why does not the earth suffice me? Am I not a king, and is not the earth mine? Are not its fruits and its flowers, its gold and its gems, mine? Do not the ocean and the mountains? and do not the cool and the myrtle enclose in its bowers? Are not the sun, the moon, and the stars, given down to be that they may? Is not the lake delicious? Is not the spring upon the kidney ever? Does not the spirit of a beloved one make the heart trouble this joy?

"And I am in my tent. On the waters below, me swam the swan, stately and unconcern. And around me were armed figures—warlike in the wild garb of Eastern enterprise—smoking, gallooping, gazing on the sun. And I was crowned with flowers—and prophetess! My gold pipe chased their attachment, and my science protected their ignorance.

* * * * *

"Such a life as the burning and roaring sun, in the frantic solitude of her penance-denied self, panting on her pillow, has pictured to herself; I had there. Slowly were the walks of my trellis, and the cool grots, bright the streams that glided noiselessly to their scarlet basins; rich and green my verdant meadows; and as the breeze passed over the fields of the lotus, the tall and cultivated blades, shook from the amorous pressure, into the enervating fragrance how many luxurious sighs, inspired by music, by gentle words, and by that luxurious air, rich with the rich productions of the East, have I not sipped in delicious moments, and whose sleeping longest sentiment change.

"Of this wondrous man I had been the offspring; alone, the world now is me the legitimate heir of his name and of his vast estates; and Sir Norman lived the palace of England; and I, sir, as I have lived, the mistress of almost regal pomp. Nothing, indeed, admitted to his Majesty, than child-beloved, and told by Rochester, that he was very ill. Lauderdale came constantly every day during Rochester's illness, and as regularly was told the answer, at which being surprised, he asked Rochester what was the nature of his Majesty's illness? who told him the King had got a new nose. Lauderdale went to court the next day, and, another Lord being in waiting, was immediately introduced to the private chamber. The king expressed his attachment at not seeing him for so many days, and on being informed of the impediment, the King called for Rochester, and demanded his meaning for saying he had got a new nose: Rochester replied, "May it please your Majesty, had I been led so long by the nose as you have been by Lauderdale, I am sure mine would have been one, so I conceived it at least my duty to deny all access to the immediate cause of your Majesty's disorder."

A Modern Tale.

The sage, the learned clergy also,
So very hard does't want to drive,
I heard my half-starved sister say,
It cost you more to edge than buy.

Above Mundane's ere Useful.

When the chief gentlemen was asked how his wife was, and replied, "Damp, dirty and dangerous, Sir," his blunder caused an exhilaration of spirits in the inquiring friend, which for ought we know (for it was in the dreary month of November), might drive away incipient thoughts of suicide. But it is the kind-hearted Smith, lofty join heartily in the merriment also excited when describing to her friends the troubles of a beggar she had been relieving, and who had been deaf and dumb an many years?

"How do you know that?" asked a friend.

"Why, he told me so himself," she replied. We know a gentleman, who, treading in an unfrequented part of Ireland, had had the presentation to learn in some Irish. "Whisht is the way?" but utterly fail, until the woman to whom he was going, that it was necessary to understand the reply to. "Is fit himself" and "Is fit" to laugh at his blunder, heartily and many as he was; and certainly the inconvenience it entailed on him, however great, would not be a setting as that caused by the blunder of a late minister to Portugal.

"Please sir," said a poor boy (dated Brentford, on a certain busy What-morning—"Please sir, you're marrying me to a wrong woman."

"Never mind that, replied the minister; "you can walk that afterward."

The Flagging Merchants.

To Hodge, the blacksmith, by his frequent wheel,
And spending much time in the shop,
Is the distress has like some other fools,
Puffs down his forge and cries out he is tools:
Nothing now left but a vent-hole!

BE ABLE TO KNOW THEM.—Young gentlemen are too apt to pride themselves on the knowledge of the active and passive verbs. An active verb expresses action, as John struck Ann. A passive verb, the receiving of an action, as Ann was struck. You perceive the distinction clearly. The sensitive being in one case acts and in the other passive.—John struck Ann; Ann was struck. Now will you tell me the passive verb to the word Ann. What did Ann do?—Dance." "None—I mean, sir." "Not—What, can't any of you tell? "Kiss, I can tell." "That's you, you are so home to your case, and a source of profit to your respectable parents. What's the passive verb—Kiddie struck Ann—what did Ann do? "I guess he got his turned flogging. I should."

A CAPITAL HIT.—A New York dandy goes it hard in the Cincinnati News:

"Cupping—I say, Cupping," said one of them to the master of a steamer, while on her way from Maysville to Cincinnati—"I say, Cupping, I think our Easter's Pilots much betwa than yours in the west—decidedly superior."

"Why so?" said the Captain.

"Why, yours steer very crooked, first one side then the other, and always keep straight down the bay. I advise you to send on for one who can make the best stay in the middle of the stream."

A TRUE SCATTERER.—The celebrated Edmond Burke, in the course of his writings, remarks: "A disposition to preserve, and an ability to improve, taken together, would be my standard of a statesman. Every thing else is but the trick, the compromise, perilous in the execution. I cannot conceive how any man can have brought himself to that pitch of presumption to consider his own mind nothing but a caste blanche, upon which he may scribble whatever he pleases. A man of warm speculative imagination may wish suddenly effectuate what he finds it, but a true patriot and a true politician always considers how he shall take the most of the existing materials of the country."

EFFECTS OF A JOKE.—A joke cannot have a happier effect than to dispel ill-humor and make a friend. Such was the result of an accidental meeting between a stranger and a crusty old gentleman, who was riding; his horse made an odd kind of motion with his fore feet, so as to look askant. "The action of your horse," said the stranger, "is quite new to me: many a horse have I seen, but I never saw a horse kick before." The old gentleman was tickled with the joke, and that tickled the stranger to dinner, and was ever after made him a welcome guest.

A DARE.—By no means," said Henry the Fifth to a soldier, whom he overheard wishing for a reinforcement from England, at the battle of Agincourt; "if we are victorious, why should we divide our glory with others? and if we are defeated, the fewer we have to die!" Such a dare-devil spirit in a soldier as Esquire David Gam, who, having been to reconnoitre the French camp, was asked by Henry how many he thought there might be? "Why, sir," said the blunt Welshman, "there are enough to fight; enough to kill, and enough to run away."

DISCOVERY THE MOTHER.—The editor of the Hamburgh Keyhole says he expected to accompany him (safely with the President's message—to be put his editorial head on the outside.

From Smith's Belt of Society for Feb.

A STRANGE STORY.

Young Mrs. Jenkins, on hiring the maid of all work, was particular in her inquiries as to her character, and was assured that she was honest, sober, and industrious.

"And this one is born, born a day of joy!—If Prince Charles has joined, as we expect, the Scots in the land, before the end of the month."

* * * * *

"And that brings us to the 'Forty-five,' when matters ran high indeed. Then it was that Flora Macdonald saved the Young Pretender, disguised over a Christian gentleman give himself such airs?"

* * * * *

"Did you mark his smile when my mother presented him to Lady Arundel?—Those Montfitch heathens—sneery, they say, a hundred wives at a time, and think we women are brutes like themselves."

* * * * *

Seven years after this night have been seen, on the very night that perished the noble Derwentwater, a group of country and town, engaged in talk figure, in Eastern costume; still a lady, appointed after the fashion of that time, in deep mourning.

Sir Evelyn Mordaunt had been one of the first victims of the civil war then raging.

* * * * *

"And, sir is me!" My mother, that gentle and tender being, so admired for her virtue, on the very night that perished her noble husband, was delivered of a daughter, and there, repeated by the side of him, whose death she never survived, closed those sleeping longest sentiment change.

"Of this wondrous man I had been the offspring; alone, the world now is me the legitimate heir of his name and of his vast estates; and Sir Norman lived the palace of England; and I, sir, as I have lived, the mistress of almost regal pomp. Nothing, indeed, admitted to his Majesty, than child-beloved, and told by Rochester, that he was very ill. Lauderdale came constantly every day during Rochester's illness, and as regularly was told the answer, at which being surprised, he asked Rochester what was the nature of his Majesty's illness? who told him the King had got a new nose. Lauderdale went to court the next day, and, another Lord being in waiting, was immediately introduced to the private chamber. The king expressed his attachment at not seeing him for so many days, and on being informed of the impediment, the King called for Rochester, and demanded his meaning for saying he had got a new nose: Rochester replied, "May it please your Majesty, had I been led so long by the nose as you have been by Lauderdale, I am sure mine would have been one, so I conceived it at least my duty to deny all access to the immediate cause of your Majesty's disorder."

A Modern Tale.

The sage, the learned clergy also,
So very hard does't want to drive,
I heard my half-starved sister say,
It cost you more to edge than buy.

Above Mundane's ere Useful.

When the chief gentlemen was asked how his wife was, and replied, "Damp, dirty and dangerous, Sir," his blunder caused an exhilaration of spirits in the inquiring friend, which for ought we know (for it was in the dreary month of November), might drive away incipient thoughts of suicide. But it is the kind-hearted Smith, lofty join heartily in the merriment also excited when describing to her friends the troubles of a beggar she had been relieving, and who had been deaf and dumb an many years?

"How do you know that?" asked a friend.

"Why, he told me so himself," she replied. We know a gentleman, who, treading in an unfrequented part of Ireland, had had the presentation to learn in some Irish. "Whisht is the way?" but utterly fail, until the woman to whom he was going, that it was necessary to understand the reply to. "Is fit himself" and "Is fit" to laugh at his blunder, heartily and many as he was; and certainly the inconvenience it entailed on him, however great, would not be a setting as that caused by the blunder of a late minister to Portugal.

"Please sir," said a poor boy (dated Brentford, on a certain busy What-morning—"Please sir, you're marrying me to a wrong woman."

"Never mind that, replied the minister; "you can walk that afterward."

The Flagging Merchants.

To Hodge, the blacksmith, by his frequent wheel,
And spending much time in the shop,
Is the distress has like some other fools,
Puffs down his forge and cries out he is tools:
Nothing now left but a vent-hole!

BE ABLE TO KNOW THEM.—Young gentlemen are too apt to pride themselves on the knowledge of the active and passive verbs. An active verb expresses action, as John struck Ann. A passive verb, the receiving of an action, as Ann was struck. You perceive the distinction clearly. The sensitive being in one case acts and in the other passive.—John struck Ann; Ann was struck. Now will you tell me the passive verb to the word Ann. What did Ann do?—Dance." "None—I mean, sir." "Not—What, can't any of you tell? "Kiss, I can tell." "That's you, you are so home to your case, and a source of profit to your respectable parents. What's the passive verb—Kiddie struck Ann—what did Ann do? "I guess he got his turned flogging. I should."

A CAPITAL HIT.—A New York dandy goes it hard in the Cincinnati News:

"Cupping—I say, Cupping," said one of them to the master of a steamer, while on her way from Maysville to Cincinnati—"I say, Cupping, I think our Easter's Pilots much betwa than yours in the west—decidedly superior."

"Why so?" said the Captain.

"Why, yours steer very crooked, first one side then the other, and always keep straight down the bay. I advise you to send on for one who can make the best stay in the middle of the stream."

A TRUE SCATTERER.—The celebrated Edmond Burke, in the course of his writings, remarks: "A disposition to preserve, and an ability to improve, taken together, would be my standard of a statesman. Every thing else is but the trick, the compromise, perilous in the execution. I cannot conceive how any man can have brought himself to that pitch of presumption to consider his own mind nothing but a caste blanche, upon which he may scribble whatever he pleases. A man of warm speculative imagination may wish suddenly effectuate what he finds it, but a true patriot and a true politician always considers how he shall take the most of the existing materials of the country."

EFFECTS OF A JOKE.—A joke cannot have a happier effect than to dispel ill-humor and make a friend. Such was the result of an accidental meeting between a stranger and a crusty old gentleman, who was riding; his horse made an odd kind of motion with his fore feet, so as to look askant. "The action of your horse," said the stranger, "is quite new to me: many a horse have I seen, but I never saw a horse kick before." The old gentleman was tickled with the joke, and that tickled the stranger to dinner, and was ever after made him a welcome guest.

A DARE.—By no means," said Henry the Fifth to a soldier, whom he overheard wishing for a reinforcement from England, at the battle of Agincourt; "if we are victorious, why should we divide our glory with others? and if we are defeated, the fewer we have to die!" Such a dare-devil spirit in a soldier as Esquire David Gam, who, having been to reconnoitre the French camp, was asked by Henry how many he thought there might be? "Why, sir," said the blunt Welshman, "there are enough to fight; enough to kill, and enough to run away."

DISCOVERY THE MOTHER.—The editor of the Hamburgh Keyhole says he expected to accompany him (safely with the President's message—to be put his editorial head on the outside.